The Siamese twins Chang and Eng have died and an examination that has been secretly con-ducted at Philadelphia disclosed, that the ligament binding them could not have been severed without causing death. It is proposed by their friends that an exhibition shall be made of the bodies, and the sum of from $8,000 to $10,000 is asked for them.

It was their unvarying custom to spend three days and a half of each week in each house, unalterable was this custom that the funeral of a son on one occasion and the wedding of a daughter on another, could not be attended by them because the ceremony was not at the right house. Thursday, Jan. 15, was the day for Chang to visit Eng's house. The former was the weaker of the two, having been paralyzed three years before on the right side, and ever since suffering from chronic pneumonia. On this night the extreme cold, the rough road, and an open carriage conduced to throwing Chang into a severe attack of his affection of the throat, and he sent word after the Queen of Great Britain. On the death thought he would have died that night. On Friof Kamehameha IV., the Crown devolved, by day night the twins slept in the second story of the house, having no one in the room but a little negro, who said they got up after midnight and the law of succession, on the heir presumptive, Kamehameha the Fifth, the founder of the sat around the fire, Chang complaining very much Hawaiian National Order of Kamehameha I., who reigned over nine years, and died at Iolani but Chang said it hurt his breast too much to lie Palace at Honolela, after a long and painful ill- down.
